NOTES TO THE CONDUCTOR

Love Is Here to Stay is a Gershwin standard that's been in the jazz repertoire for decades. My goal for this arrangement was to do something with the melody that was a little different but maintained the integrity of this wonderful song. The chorale in the introduction actually came about at the suggestion of Pat Michaud, band director at the Hampden Academy in Maine. The concept for the introduction should be as a ballad with straight eighths. The flugelhorn in the trumpet 1 part has the melody and should be clearly heard.

At m. 16 the tempo should be bright, but not too fast. All charts have a tipping point for tempo, so I suggest letting the sax soli at m. 77 be your guide. There are some dynamic peaks and valleys written into the arrangement for contrast—the big moments always take care of themselves, so work to bring life to the softer dynamics. The brief Latin interlude before the sax soli can be a challenge. I suggest having your drummer check out songo grooves in advance to provide a solid concept. The soli will be a great opportunity to feature your sax section—and don't let them complain. They'll get it! Although the tenor and alto sax solos are written out, encourage your soloists to improvise. This tune and arrangement provides a good example of how various ii–V chord progressions resolve.

Moving out of the solo section and back into the home stretch, the lead trumpet has several opportunities to play the part up an octave, at m. 146, m. 147, and m. 161. Understand that none of these higher notes are required, as the sound of the trumpets in unison will provide all you'll need. But if your lead player has the horses, then go for it. The counterpoint section at m. 149 is my influence from legendary arranger Bill Holman. Strive for balance between the moving lines, and make sure everyone catches the modulation. The last five measures of the chart feature some tricky unison sax lines. I suggest the section work these lines out slowly, then increase up to tempo when ready. Bring down the brass dynamically so the hard work that the saxes accomplished can be heard. Finish strong with a balanced chord, and your work is done!

I enjoyed writing this chart. I appreciate you taking the time to rehearse and play this music. Many thanks!

All the best!
